"Vae Victis."

The following account of the Vie Victis sensation in Richmond in December, 1884, prepared by Mr. Charles J. Wise, was read by that gentleman at the last meeting of Lee Camp, Confederate Veterans, of this city:

"There are few persons who had reached the age of maturity, either as civilians or who were in the army and were either residents of Richmond or were compelled by force of circumstances to visit that city, who do not remember the winter of 1864 and

"The weather was cold, dreary and cheerliess; frequent storms of rain, snow and sleet tended to make the life of a soldier, either in camp or is the trenches, if possible more miserable and uncomfortable—the scarcity of wood for fires, and the diminishing of the shortest of short rations, which had reached a point that seemed to be the lowest that human life could be sustained, and to say 'thus far shalt thou go and no farther.' Government money, or gray backs, as it was facetionally called, was hardly worth the paper on which it was printed, provisions paper on which it was printed, provisions were even scarcer than ever, and the pale, gaunt and famine-stricken faces told of the suffering of the many. The Government had opened supply depots where rations were regularly issued, but in order to do so, the rations of the soldiers were decreased. and from their stint the clamors of the people were appeased.

"Clothing, blankets, shoes and all that was necessary to supply the army in the field, could only be obtained in small quantities, and were totally insufficient to meet one tenth of the demand, and the result was as expected, that the brave fellows, chilled by the wintry blasts, shoeless, hatless, coaticss and little to cat, who had withstood the temptation to desert, began to fill the hospitals, and then the graves that were usceasingly dug. Amidst all this gloom, disease and suffering, suddenly, in December, 1864, there appeared on the dead walls, fences, payements in diferent parts of the city, and wherever the space could be found upon which it could be written, the words 'V.E. VICTIS.' 'What does it mean?' was the almost universal question. 'Woe to the conquered,' was the reply. And who are the conquered? Sit we to be conquered? Ah! do we not see our soldiers as well as ourselves on the HARDWARE AND CUPLERY.

HARDWARE AND CUPLERY.

Our soldiers as well as ourselves on the verge of starvation and in rags? Are not the hospitals full, and is not death reaping his inrvest fully beyond his expectations? Is not half the land in mourning and have we not suffered enough already? What other woes are in store for us? No! we will not be conquered. The inscription had such an effect upon the people, not only in Richmond, but in the cutire South, that he Richmond, but in the entire South, that finally the authorities interposed, and a general order was issued preventing the inscription and imposing a severe penalty upon any one who was detected in writing it, and the provest guard were instructed to efface the writing and keep a look-out for the offender. But no sooner had it been effaced in one part of the city than it appeared in another—the etters even larger, portentious in their meaning, mysterious in their ap-pearance, doubly significant to their proph-coy, it remained staring passers by in the face like a tird of evil omen. All efforts to find the author, or even the originator of the mysterious words, borrowed from the Romans, who inscribed it on the walls and Excelsion Dyes houses of their conquered towns, have utterly houses of their conquered towns, have utterly failed even to this day, but the fact remains the same, that no reverse in battle, or any other calamity, save the death of Stonewall Jackson, ever had the same long continued and depressing effect as "the handwriting on the wall" on the minds and spirits of the

But was not this mysterious person a prophet? How did he know of the insults, indignities and dishonor that would be heaped upon the heads of a people that had proved themselves, at least, brave, and were worthy of better treatment? How did he know that the conquered would be accused of treachery and assassination, humiliated by enforced association with their former The good qualities of the above machines are now well established.

We are seiling them at as low a price as they can be purchased in any of the larger cities, and are prepared to allow as much for old machines of by a suborned press, caricatured in all manwhich as is possible.

We have seen so much good done by the "Domestic," that we wish every family to have at least one in their house. Prices fixed, but terms rant and designing negroes and carpet bag-gers and a grand show of diseased and disabled men taken from their own hospitals, as representatives of Southern cruelty and Southern treatment? But I will not extend
